Spot

That year we started very late for the Klondike. When Steve and I were ready to leave, it began snowing and the weather was freezing. We had to buy dogs in order to pull the sledge, which was the only way of transport in Alaska at that time of the year.

We had little time and it was difficult to buy dogs. We paid about one hundred dollars for each dog.

That was how we got Spot, though we paid even more for him – he cost one hundred and ten dollars. He looked a very good dog. I think he was the strongest-looking and the most intelligent-looking dog in Alaska.

When it was time to start our journey, Steve gave the signal and all the dogs started pulling the sledge. Only Spot did not move. We tried hard to make him pull the sledge. It had no effect. Spot stood where he was. Well, the dog stayed with us but he did not do any work. And how much he ate! We often had no dinner because Spot had it instead of us. He stole food from everywhere. People very often saw him stealing meat and came to get their money from us.

That's why we decided to sell Spot. He looked a good dog, so people were glad to buy him. Very soon we sold him to the police. We went north and the policemen went south. Six days passed. On the seventh day we were woken up by a terrible dog fight. Obviously, Spot was with us again. Steve and I ate a pretty depressing breakfast but we cheered up two hours later when we sold Spot again. This time he came back in three days. As usual, Spot celebrated his arrival with a fight with the other dogs.

We spent the whole winter in Alaska. We got some money for our work and we got some money for Spot. We sold that dog ten, twenty, thirty times. We sold him as high as one hundred and fifty dollars, and we sold him as low as twenty-five dollars. But he always came back.
