The Story of the Round Table

King Arthur ruled more than thirty kingdoms. During these years, Arthur did much for his people. There are lots of interesting legends about Arthur and his knights. Here is how the story of the Round Table began.

On Easter Day, Arthur invited all his knights and aristocrats from his many kingdoms to a great dinner. Kings, barons and knights came from far and near.

When they arrived they saw the tables were ready with silver baskets, golden bowls and cups full of wine. As the knights and aristocrats talked and waited for Arthur, they began to choose where to sit. All of them wanted places at the top of the table, near the King, because secretly each man thought himself better and more important than any of the others. So they began to push each other aside and say,

‘Make a way, this is my seat.’

‘No, I am more honourable than you. You must sit below me.’

‘My name is more popular than yours.’

At first it was only words but soon it became worse. Because they were not allowed to bring weapons into the dining hall, the knights and aristocrats had only their hands to fight with. The wine was spilled, the loaves of bread, the golden cups and silver baskets were thrown around, the tables and benches were overturned, shouting and cries filled the hall. When the noise was at its worst, the door opened and King Arthur entered.

‘Every man, sit in the place where he is, or he will be dead,’ he cried angrily.

Silently the aristocrats sat down. But Arthur was sad. While he was thinking what he could do, Merlin came to him.

‘Don’t be sad, O King,’ he said, ‘listen to my advice. Tell your servants to make a great round table at which there will be a place for every knight. A round table has neither top nor bottom, so no knight can say that he sits above or below another. All will be equal.’

King Arthur did as Merlin advised. There were 150 places at the round table and each knight had his own place. People called them The Knights of the Round Table.
